LEDGER BULLETINS POPULAR Promptness and Accuracy of Service Notable in Lusitania Disaster. The popularity, as well as the efficiency of the EVENING LEDGER'S bulletin board service throughout the city was especially emphasized during the gloomy days when the Lusitania horror filled the public mind.

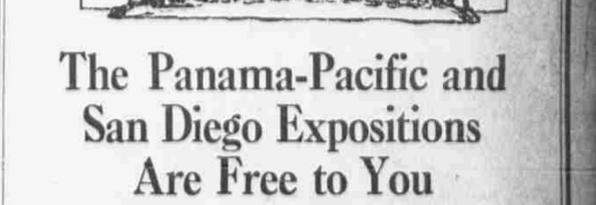

From the moment the first bulletin announcing the terrible tragedy was printed—and this was done in less than seven minutes after the wires had flashed the news—until late into the night, vast crowds surged around the boards at different localities awaiting with almost breathless interest, fear alternating with hope, the next message which the expert operator was preparing.

In many places traffic was impeded; but what was public traffic, even to the alert policeman, in view of such a stupendous tragedy? On Friday and Saturday about 150 bulletins were put upon the boards—a rural newspaper, in which every detail flashed across the ocean was concisely presented to the public.
